

ABSTRACT

There is provided a semiconductor device wherein at least the largest width of a source/drain region is larger than the width of a semiconductor region and the source/drain region has a slope having a width continuously increasing 5 from the uppermost side to the substrate side, and a silicide film is formed in the surface of the slope.